In the above tables, such breeds highlighted in red.
category House Cats – with a separate, independent Best-in-Show HCL – House Cat Longhair HCS – House Cat Shorthair

The list of breeds, their EMS-codings and division into categories can be found on the official ASC website, in the "Standards" section: <http://supercats.info/breed-standards/>

The description of the standard for each breed contains information about the colors recognized in this breed, as well as the grouping of colors, if such is provided for the breed.

Some breeds are divided into color groups. Competitions at shows in such breeds are held among a group of colors, and not in one color.

For example. Group of colors for Maine Coon breed

Judge

F.Dubois

If required, the Roman numeral indicates the color group. Then it is implied that cats will be judged as in the same color. However, Ragdolls are not divided into color groups, so the EMS codes are not accompanied by Roman numerals (see Nos. 118 and 119). Since these two cats are judging in the "juniors" class, their gender does not matter for comparison (just like kittens, aged 3-6 months). Therefore, only one of them can get the "Ex1" mark. A similar green color marking will be marked in your judging list.

2/ cats that do have a group of colors.
 For example, numbers 109 and 110.

Judge

F.Dubois

Adult females No. 109 and 110 should be compared with each other so that one of them gets the title. Despite the fact that their colors are different, they are in the same color group.

At the same time, cat No. 108 can get the title without any comparison, because it's the adult male.

Judge											F.Dubois

You don't have to fill in the "Titles" column, as the software calculates titles based on the estimates you have entered.

At the end of working with this list, you need to choose the best adult male, the best adult female, the best neutered male, the best sterilized female, one best junior and one best kitten (juniors and kittens are chosen without regard to gender).

The numbers of the nominated cats should be written in the line "Nomination" for Best in show.

If there is no majority of votes, then the show host announces the principle of choice. As a rule, it is like this: at the first divergence of opinions, the choice remains with the judge whose surname is the first alphabetically. In our example, this is the choice of Ms. Dubois. In case of subsequent discrepancy, the choice of Mr. Germishuys will be accepted.
